Autocad MEP 2017 PC.The present invention relates generally to the field of computer assisted surgery, and, more particularly to the creation of the parameters for surgical tools used in computer assisted surgery. Computer assisted surgery is a type of medical equipment that assists a physician in performing medical procedures. Computer assisted surgery is designed to improve the quality and safety of a medical procedure. It is intended to reduce the time and cost of surgery while increasing the quality of the patient's care. The computer assisted surgery utilizes a variety of medical imaging technologies, such as magnetic resonance imaging (MRI), x-ray imaging (CT), nuclear medicine imaging (NM), computerized tomography (CT), single photon emission computed tomography (SPECT) and ultrasound imaging. Computer assisted surgery is typically used in complex and sensitive surgeries, such as neurosurgery. Brain surgery can be particularly difficult. Invasive neurosurgery can be a highly invasive, dangerous procedure that requires precise and delicate medical tools to successfully perform the procedure. Computer assisted surgery can be used to increase the quality and safety of this type of surgery. The use of computer assisted surgery is intended to reduce the time and cost of surgery while increasing the quality of the patient's care. Computer assisted surgery uses a variety of medical tools for assisting the surgeon. These tools include, but are not limited to, tactile forceps, microscopes, surgical lasers, drillers, and navigation devices. Navigation is a tool used in brain surgery. It allows the surgeon to accurately target a medical tool to a precise location within the brain of the patient. These navigation tools may use electromagnetic fields, optical imaging, or other navigation tools to determine the position of the navigated tool within the patient. The navigation tool is attached to the patient, and the tool is moved according to the instructions of the surgeon. Creating the parameters for these medical tools to be used in computer assisted surgery requires a unique medical device to create the parameters. The device is used to create the parameters of the medical tool. The medical device may be a specialized device for the computer assisted surgery, or it can be a conventional medical device.Puhemiespalveluviranomainen Aviators on luvannut pelata nyt lauantai-iltana kaikkia
